PREFACE

Field research for this study was done under the auspices of the Summer Institute of Linguistics in the Axininca (Campa) village of Puerto Davis on the Apurucayali River and the center of operations of the Summer Institute of Linguistics in Yarinacocha, Peru, during the months of February to September, 1978. Jorge Sánchez was the primary source of information in the linguistic analysis and elicitation. Initial travel arrangements to Peru were partially funded by an International Pre-Dissertation Fellowship awarded by the International Programs and Studies Committee of The University of Texas at Austin.

I wish to express my gratitude in acknowledgement of assistance from various sources: to my wife, Judy, for collaboration in linguistic analysis and preparation and typing of the manuscript; to Jorge Sánchez, for the months of labor in the elicitation and analysis; to Dr. Robert D. King, my supervising professor, for advice, help and encouragement during the last few years; to Andrés Sánchez and Simón Santos and the people of Puerto Davis for their hospitality and cooperation; to my colleagues working in the related Campa dialects, especially to Mary Ruth Wise, for valuable comments on an earlier draft of the manuscript, and to Allene Heitzman, Dottie Shaler, Judy Carlson, Ron and Janice Anderson, Richard and Jackie Rutter, and Ken and Joy Swift; to Dorothy Behnke and Nancy Sanders for typing of an earlier draft; and to my parents for help and encouragement during the final preparation of the manuscript.
